Describe present and historic physical appearance.

Situated on 0.53 of an acre and encircled by a cast iron fence, Holy Innocents' Episcopal Church of Como faces east onto Main Street. Built in 1872 in the Carpenter Gothic style, the small, one-story church with steeply pitched cross-gabled roof is cruciform in plan and has a 1944 addition to the rear. The building is raised on stuccoed brick piers and is finished with white clapboards, projecting baseboards and slender, tapered wooden buttresses.

The front-gabled main (east) facade contains a centered entrance porch flanked by stained glass lancet windows and surmounted by a circular window. This circular window, which is said to have inspired the name of the church, is a stained glass memorial given by Mrs. N.R. Sledge, Sr., in the name of her grandchildren Katie and Tommy Hunter in memory of their mother who died in 1870 (Parish Register, Holy Innocents' Episcopal Church, on microfilm at the Mississippi Department of Archives and History, Jackson). The porch, which is carried by four short square posts, has a pointed arched opening surmounted by a trefoil. At the peak of the porch roof is a wooden cross.

The gable ends of the building are trimmed with a wide, simple raked entablature, which on the main facade is further decorated with paired brackets. The roofing material was originally cypress shingles but is now slate.

Buttresses frame the front facade and punctuate the five bays of the north and south elevations of the nave section of the church. A tall, narrow, rectangular stained-glass window capped by a label and surrounded by plain trim and sill occupies each bay. The gabled transept has a lower roof line than the nave and contains two single-leaf entrances topped with labels on its east elevation and a rectangular stained-glass window with label and plain trim and sill on both its north and south elevations. The chancel contains a large, pointed-arched, stained-glass window with plain trim and moulding on its west elevation. The rear addition, which was built in 1944, houses the Sunday school and parish house. The addition is a frame, gableroofed structure on the southwest corner which neither contributes to the significance of the building nor detracts from it.

Immediately inside the main entrance is the nave, with plastered walls and wainscoting of vertical stained boards. Straight beams extending from the apex of the ceiling are connected to curved, carved beams which continue midway down the wall to create transverse arches.

These arches and the ceiling are dark stained wood.

The chancel is separated from the nave by an elevated floor and wooden railing. A pointed arch supported by columns frames the entrance to the chancel and is flanked on either side by a smaller pointed arch, the one on the north being a blind arch. The ceiling of the chancel is also of stained wood and has plain decorative beams. The lecturn and pulpit of burnished brass are original to the building.

State significance of property, and justify criteria, criteria considerations, and areas and periods of significance noted above.

Holy Innocents' Episcopal Church derives its significance from its architectural character, being one of the most sophisticated of the few Carpenter Gothic style churches remaining in Mississippi (Criterion C). Also significant is the fact that the church was built by Andrew Johnson, a prolific and creative north Mississippi contractor and architect of the late nineteenth century, whose work is described in the National Register of Historic Places thematic nomination, "The Architecture of Andrew Johnson in North Mississippi." (Because the church was not designed by Johnson, this nomination is not being submitted as part of the thematic nomination.) Early in his Mississippi career, Johnson served as contractor on at least three Panola County buildings designed by James B. Cook, an English architect based in Memphis. Of these three buildings, only Holy Innocents' Episcopal Church in Como survives.

As early as 1860, efforts were made to establish an Episcopal church in Como; however, it was not until 1872 that Holy Innocents' Episcopal Church was organized by Rev. William S. Speirs. The congregation, feeling the need for a building in which to worship, placed N. R. Sledge, Jr., in charge of collecting the necessary funds. A lot containing 0.53 of an acre was donated by Colonel and Mrs. Monroe Pointer; and although only $1,500 had been donated for building the church, it was decided to commence construction. The cornerstone was laid December 25, 1872, and the building was completed within the next year. Because the church was deeply in debt, N. R. Sledge and Sons assumed all liabilities and the church was consecrated on October 21, 1873, by Bishop Green. (Parish Register, Holy Innocents' Episcopal Church, on microfilm at Mississippi Department of Archives and History, Jackson).
