7 - DESCRIPTION

East Holly Springs Historic District

Primary elements (P) are significant documents of the historic and architectural development of the community, possess a high degree of architectural integrity, and maintain the scale, texture and use of the district. Contributing elements (C), both old and new, complement the historic streetscape by maintaining compatible scale, texture and use or, are historic elements which have been considerably, but not irreparably, altered. Marginal elements (M) have no distinguishable present or future historic or architectural value, but do not significantly detract from the tout ensemble of the district. Intrusive elements (I) have been unsympathetically altered beyond repair or, are elements which interrupt the scale, texture and use of the district.

Note: Because of the disparities inherent in Holly Springs' three street numbering systems and the relatively high incidence of unnumbered buildings, individual addresses have been deleted from the following inventory. Building numbers assigned in this inventory correspond with those used on the map labelled, "Holly Springs Multiple Resource Nomination to the National Register of Historic Places: Key to Partial Inventory of Architectural Resources."

East Holly Springs Historic District

8 - SIGNIFICANCE

The proposed East Holly Springs Historic District is the largest of the community's three architecturally significant residential neighborhoods. An outstanding collection of the town's finest Greek Revival, Gothic Revival, and Queen Anne style buildings are located within its boundaries. Salem Avenue, often called "Silk-Stocking Avenue" in the late nineteenth century, is dominated by the expansive lawns of Montrose (#110), Oakleigh (#91), and Wakefield (#104), three of the most splendid Greek Revival homes in the area, and Airliewood (#109) and Cedarhurst (#103), picturesque Gothic Revival residences (Crocker, Historic Architecture in Mississippi, p. 160). Holly Springs' best Queen Anne style residences (#89, 158, 212) are located within this proposed district, as are its only Federal style home, Linden Terrace (#157), and French Second Empire residence, Christ Church Rectory (#201), one of the first buildings designed by architect Samuel Manning Patton (Williams and Patton, New Orleans, Sulley, Toledano and Patton, Chattanooga, Tennessee). (Obituaries, The South, 8 and 15 April 1897). In addition, the proposed district features several homes designed by Holly Springs architect Spires Bolling, including the Bolling-Gatewood House (#209), White Pillars (#234), and Finley Place (#128), each distinguished by its octagonal columns. Locally significant examples of vernacular architecture, most notably Italianate Cottages (#108, 113, 143, 151), Bungalows (#146, 155, 170, 202), and folk houses (#139, 193, 216, 217) complement the area's rich variety of high-style architecture. Of the 193 buildings in the proposed East Holly Springs Historic District, only two percent intrude upon its high degree of architectural integrity.

Additional Information for the East Holly Springs Historic District, Historic Resources of Holly Springs, Marshall County, Mississippi.

Supplement to Item 7, Description, Inventory No. 234

Because it no longer contributes to the architectural significance of the district, the status of White Pillars, on Maury Street (Inventory No. 234), should be downgraded from Pivotal to Marginal, indicating that it is non-contributing in its present state. The house underwent major alterations in 1985 in which its architectural integrity was destroyed. These alterations include the addition of a brick veneer; the introduction of ornamental window lintels; replacement of the three-bay balcony with a full-width balcony; changing the dual-pitched roof to a single-pitched roof; and the removal of a chimney (see Photo #56).
