Inventory No. 2

ARCHITECTURAL DESCRIPTION:

The old Seashore Campground School is a two-story, thirteen-by-three-bay, hip-roof, frame building with wide overhanging eaves. The facade fenestration is delineated into three distinct sections and consists of a central three-bay section flanked by two tiers of five, closely-spaced, nine-over-nine, double-hung, sash windows. The first-story level of the central section is composed of a double-leaf entrance, sheltered by a Bungaloid portico and flanked by double-hung sash windows. Having exposed rafters and structural braces, the portico roof is supported on compressed columns that rest upon the clapboarded balustrade which encloses the porch. The upper portion of the central three-bay section contains a central tripartite window flanked by double-hung sash. Centered on the roof is an octagonal, Colonial Revival lantern with glazed openings and an ornate finial.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE:

The Seashore Campground School was established as a private school in 1892. It was part of the well-known Seashore Campground established in the late-nineteenth century by the wealthy New Orleans soap manufacturer and philanthropist, John Henry Keller (who lived in the Hermann House from 1871 to 1908). The property, still in use by the Methodist Church today, was the site of the Annual Camp Meetings of the New Orleans, Mobile, and Seashore district conference. The Seashore Campground School is the oldest remaining structure in the complex.
