NARRATIVE DESCRIPTION

EXTERIOR

The Finley B. Hewes House, known as "Blossom Lodge," located at 604 East Beach Boulevard, in Gulfport, Harrison County, Mississippi, is an excellent example of Colonial Revival residential architecture.

The two-story wood-frame house is well suited to the coastal region with its graceful covered galleries facing the Gulf of Mexico to capture the prevailing gulf breezes from the south. The house is set deeply back from what was the north shoreline of the Gulf (having been built before the construction of the existing concrete sea wall), nestled among moss-draped Live Oaks, Water Oaks, and Magnolia trees. Additional landscape materials surrounded the house and its property giving wonderful aromas of the seasonal blooming plants and trees such as the huge Magnolia tree once located on the front lawn (destroyed in 1969 by Hurricane Camille), Gardenias, and Camellias.

The structure is two stories in height with a hipped roof. The south side of the structure (front) has two pedimented dormers and has one pedimented dormer on the east and west sides of the structure. The roofing material is of composite shingles. The dormer has louvered shutters. The windows are made of wood and are one-over-one double hung.

The front facade of the structure has a four bay gallery on both the first and second floors. On the first floor the gallery extends to the east to form a porte cochere. The galleries' entablature beams on both stories are supported by twin Roman Doric columns with Attic bases set upon a recessed paneled plinth. On each corner of the galleries and portico, there are three Roman Doric columns with Attic bases on the same type of plinths

Between the column plinths run the handrails for both the lower gallery and second floor gallery. The handrail is of a wide flat piece with core moulding below the handrail and the top fascia of the handrail forming a two-piece cap. The balusters are rectangular in form and are attached to a top fascia and handrail and a bottom fascia two inches above the galleries wood decking. Each handrail section is supported at the mid section of the bottom handrail fascia and the gallery deck by small wood blocks. The handrail is at the same height as the tops of the columns plinths forming a continuous band. This band is further enhanced by the hunter green color painted on the handrail and plinth tops

The gallery decking is tongue and groove wood painted gray which is a common color for Gulf Coast area. The ceilings are wood tongue and groove painted in the traditional sky blue.

The front facade entertains the main entry to the structure. The entry way is slightly off center of the structure and features double wood doors with glass above the lock rail and a raised wood panel below the lock rail. To each side of the double doors there are two fixed side lights with glass above a simulated lock rail and a raised wood panel below the simulated lock rail. It was the intention of the architect to line up the lock rails of the double doors with the simulated lock rails of the sidelights. Above the double doors is a fixed single light transom that is the width of the doors, and a fixed transom above each side light forming a square. Two wooden screen doors are installed in front of the double wood and glass doors. The rails, styles, and lock rail are the same as the double doors. To each side of the entry door there is one full length double hung window one on the west side and two full length double hung windows on the east side. Each window has a glass pattern of one over one. The windows are full-length meaning that the tops of the windows start just below the interior ceiling mouldings and runs to the floor. Wood louvered shutters that can be closed during difficult weather conditions protect the windows. The second floor gallery is similar to the first floor gallery with the exception of not having an entry door and a bay window off one of the second floor bedroom.

The north facade or rear of the structure has a small porch that runs along the west side of the kitchen and butler's pantry and ends at the rear entry doors that are similar to the front doors. On the second floor of the structure there is a four bay rear gallery. The columns are square Roman Doric with a plinth block base. The handrails are the same as the galleries found on the south side of the structure. This second floor rear gallery has been glassed-in. Sheet glass was used to enclose the porch. The glass has been installed behind the wood handrails and is inconspicuous.

The exterior wood finish of the structures is wood lap siding painted in the traditional white. At each corner the contractor employed corner boards for termination of the lap siding. Each window consists of four inch wide exterior casings with a water table moulding above each window.

INTERIOR

The interior of the structure has retained its original details, including the heart pine flooring, fireplace mantles, millwork, and plaster ceiling medallions, and mouldings.

When entering the structure from the front, one enters through the two wood doors with glass above the lock rail and wood raised panels below. Through these doors one enters into a large formal foyer that showcases the main staircase to the second floor. On the west wall of the foyer are the original fireplace and mantel. The wood mantel has carved wood flat columns with the capitals similar to the Corinthian order by the use of acanthus leaves. The columns support the mantle that is in keeping with the Ionic entablature with dentils just below the cornice and against the frieze. The fireplace is coal burning and has the original cast iron face surround by a green tile and a black marble hearth to the right of the fireplace starts a recessed panel wainscot that abuts the staircase and continuous under the stairs. Above the windows in this room a plaster valance in the form of a cove with acanthus leaves in the cove with egg and darts below and dentils along the bottom edge.

The main staircase is the focal point of the entry foyer. The stairs consist of heart pine threads and handrails. The balusters are round and tapered. The handrail and threads are finished natural complementing the heart pine. A small cove moulding exist below the thread and runs along the riser and along the face stringer. The face stringer has a small bead moulding running along the lower half. Below each thread there is simple thread bracket installed over the face stringer. A stair runner is used going up the center of the stairs that matches the area floor carpeting. Poised above the first stair landing a large stain glass window is found and is in excellent condition. Installed on the ceiling there is a plaster medallion.

The Living Room is similar to the Foyer in respect to the millwork details. The fireplace in the Living Room has the same type of columns under the mantle and the same style columns above the mantle framing a mirror. The mantle frieze on this fireplace is more in the Federal Period and does not have dentils as on the Foyer's fireplace. The fireplace mantle extends above the mantle and has a mirror above the fireplace is a coal burning fireplace with a cast iron front. The face around the fireplace opening is of white tile brick with a white marble hearth. There are pocket doors that enter the Living Room from the Foyer and another set that leads from the Living Room into the Dining Room. The wood doors have eight raised wood panels that are horizontal. In the center of the ceiling in the Living Room has a plaster medallion.

The Dining Room has heart pine flooring and a two-piece chair rail on each wall. On the east wall the Living Room is graced by a well proportioned bay window with three double hung windows that terminate just below the ceiling moulding. The fireplace in this room has Ionic columns on plinth blocks on each side of the fireplace. Above the mantel, there is both a mirror and a china cabinet with a leaded glass door. The fireplace is coal burning with a cast iron face. Surrounding the fireplace opening a red tile brick was used. The hearth is also of red tile bricks. Exiting the Living Room into the rear foyer you pass through two swinging door of wood with six horizontal raised panels and finished naturally. The doors have a transom above, which is made of the same species of wood and is finished natural. There is a plaster medallion in the center of the ceiling.

The rear foyer leads to the north porch. The rear entry doors are of the same style as the front entry with the exception of not having sidelights on either side. The rear foyer has heart pine floors; large base boards as in the rest of the structure and has a one piece chair rail on the walls.

The Piano Room has a fireplace with the mantle supported by brackets. To each side of the fireplace is a Doric column setting on a plinth. Above the mantle is an oval mirror giving this fireplace a nautical feel. The fireplace is coal burning and has a cast iron face. The Piano Room has a bay window with three double hung windows, which faces toward the west. The millwork and details are similar to the other rooms in the structure. In the center of the ceiling there is a plaster medallion.

The stairs continue up from the second floor and leads to the attic. The landing between the second floor and the attic has a stained glass window.

The fireplace in Bedroom 4 is a simple design of wood finished natural. The fireplace is coal burning with a cast iron face. Surrounding the fireplace opening is brick tile with the same material used for the hearth.

Bedroom 2 has a bay window made up of 3 double hung windows that are one over one, which faces toward the east. The window casings and window sashes are finished natural.

The tops of the windows extend to the bottom of a picture moulding running around the room. The fireplace in Bedroom 2 has the same mantle design and finish as Bedroom 4 with the exception of the color of the brick tile.

The second floor hall has a chair rail that is one piece and runs throughout the hallway. The doors leading off of the hallway into the various second floor rooms is made of wood and has five horizontal raised panels and the finish is natural. Above the doors there is a glass transom with the sashes finished natural. The door casings are simple with a backboard that runs up each side and across the top. The bottom of the door casings terminates at a plinth block.

Bedroom 1 has a fireplace that shares the same simple design as the other bedrooms on the second floor with the exception of a wood framed oval mirror attached to the wall just above the mantle. This fireplace is also coal burning and has a cast iron grill. Bedroom 1 also has a bay window of the same design as Bedrooms 2 and 3. The bay window in this bedroom looks to the west.

Bedroom 3 has the same type of wood mantle design as all the bedrooms on the second floor. This bedroom has a bay window which is the same as the other bedroom bay windows and looks to the Gulf of Mexico.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Finley B. Hewes House, known as "Blossom Lodge," at 604 East Beach Boulevard in Gulfport, Harrison County, Mississippi, is significant at the local level under Criterion C in the area of architecture as a locally notable example of Colonial Revival residential design. It is also notable as the home of the first mayor of Gulfport, Finley B. Hewes, who was appointed mayor by Governor Amselm J. McLaurin in 1898, when the City of Gulfport became incorporated.

Finley B. Hewes and his wife Mary Percy Roberts built Blossom Lodge in 1904. Mr. Hewes commissioned the New Orleans architect H. L. Burton, formerly of Burton & Fraenkel, Architects, in 1904 to develop plans, drawings, and specifications for a two-story wood-frame house. The contract was let to O. E. Thompson on June 28, 1904, for the lump sum of four thousand dollars.

Mary Percy Roberts Hewes was the niece of Percy Roberts who inherited the estate of his father Dr. Hiram Alexander Roberts, a prominent surgeon from Port Gibson, Mississippi, who built "Grass Lawn" in Gulfport, Mississippi, in 1835, as a summer estate. Percy Roberts and his wife, who had no children of their own, raised Mary Percy Roberts, who had been orphaned at an early age. Mary Percy Roberts met and married Finley B. Hewes in 1901, and they lived for a short while at Grass Lawn with her widowed aunt. During this stay their son, Finley B. Hewes, Jr. was born at Grass Lawn.

In 1904, Blossom Lodge was built less than a mile to the east of Grass Lawn. Grass Lawn was then sold to the Milner Family.

Blossom Lodge is one of the few Colonial Revival Style houses remaining intact along the Mississippi Gulf Coast. This style of architecture had a strong influence on vernacular architecture along the Gulf Coast and flourished in the early turn of the century. Most of the structures of this style that had been built in Gulfport have been destroyed by hurricanes or were razed to make way for new more modern structures.

Today, Blossom Lodge is owned by Dr. Thomas Hewes, a direct descendent of Finley B. Hewes.
