MISSISSIPPI HISTORIC RESOURCES INVENTORY

30. Brief statement of the property's history According to the current owner, the original section of this house was built c. 1830. The addition and its breezeway, along with the Doric box columns, appear to be c. 1850 additions. It is known that Judge Shelton and his wife lived in this house during the Civil War. His wife taught school in this building during that time. Perhaps as early as the 1850's the Sheltons lived here and the addition served as her school. The property changed hands several times in the early 20th century. Finally, in 1919, it was purchased by Thomas Monroe Holliday and his wife, Lucretia Beaufait Holliday. Today the house is still owned by members of the Holliday family.

31. Brief description. If a thorough description has been prepared separately, disregard this section and check here . Originally constructed as a simple dogtrot house with an open breezeway and full-width, undercut, front gallery, the Shelton House was enlarged c. 1850 by a two-pen addition to its SE (gable) elevation. This addition, oriented perpendicular to the earlier structure, extends beyond the plane of the main facade to enclose the end of the front gallery. While joined to the main structure by a continuation of the gable roof, the addition was separated from the main building block by another open breezeway. Both breezeways were eventually enclosed by sidelighted doors, which physical evidence indicates may have occurred c. 1870. This one story, eight-bay wide (cont)

32. Additional remarks or continuation of other sections. house is sheathed in clapboard, but flushboard covers the exterior wall located in the gallery area. The gallery's Doric box columns appear to be an 1850's alteration. The 9/6 double hung sash windows have wood shutters. The house has two interior brick chimneys and one exterior chimney on the NW facade. The innermost interior chimney was probably originally an exterior chimney before the addition was constructed.
