DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Galleries is a two-and-one-half-story, 4x5-bay house with a hip roof and two-tiered undercut galleries on two sides. The walls are brick clad with scored concrete and three gable roofed dormers project from the slopes of the hip roof on the front (west) and side (north) elevations. The house is oriented with the side (north) elevation as the main facade and there are four entrances. Two are centrally located in the north elevation of each floor. One is located directly opposite the first floor door on the south elevation and one is located in the first bay of the front elevation on the second floor. Both door surrounds on the north elevation contain sidelights and transoms, the upstairs surround somewhat more detailed with "pilasters en rissault." The door located on the second floor west elevation contains only a transom. Windows contain 6-over-6 sash and are set in segmentally arched openings. The roof is of sheet metal stamped in imitation of shingles and has been retained from the 1880s period. The first floor gallery is supported on brick piers clad with concrete and the remains of brick piers on the south side of the house indicated that galleries were once located on three elevations. The second floor columns are round and support a cornice enriched with paired brackets above each column. A scroll sawn balustrade enriches the second floor gallery.

The house as it stands today is more monumental in appearance than it was originally. An 1895 drawing of the house (Picturesque Vicksburg, p. 117) shows the street level raised in the front to the present second floor level so that the first floor level is barely visible. Main entrances appear to have been the second floor doorways, and an exterior stairway led to the formal entrance on the north elevation while a pathway led from the street to the entrance on the west elevation.

More recent changes to the exterior include the concrete cladding ca. 1940, the addition of the first floor door surround which originally served as an inner door for the upstairs entrance, and the dormers added ca. 1965. Despite these alterations the history of the house many still be well-read in its architectural details.

The interior retains much of its original Greek Revival style woodwork mantels and one ceiling medallion.

BUILDER/ARCHITECT

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Historically significant because of its association with the Bowmar and Dabney families of Vicksburg, Mississippi, the Galleries is also architecturally important as an example of post-civil war residential building in that city.

to add this

Thought to have been built ca. 1869, the land on which the Galleries stands was part of the Lum estate which was subdivided and surveyed in 1868. The land was acquired by the Bomar family in 1869 and a house on the property is later referred to as the "family residence." (Warren Co., Miss. Deed Book 56:351). A prominent realtor and land agent, J. H. D. Bomar advertised "J. H. D. Bomar, Land Agent will attend promptly to selling, purchasing and leasing lands or procuring partners for those who wish to plant... in Mississippi, Louisiana or Arkansas." (Vicksburg [Miss.] Daily Herald, March 12, 1868, p. 1.) By 1890 J. H. D. Bowmar and Son, Real Estate Agents were advertised as the "oldest established and widest known agency in this section of the state." (In and About Vicksburg [Vicksburg: Gibraltar Publishing Co., 1890]). Following "his father's footsteps, J. C. Bowmar became "an authority on land values" who had "engineered some of the largest deals during his time in both city and country realty." By 1895 the house is listed in the city directory as the residence of Major T. G. Dabney and is pictured in the book Picturesque Vicksburg (H. P. Chapman and J. F. Battaile, Picturesque Vicksburg [Vicksburg: Vicksburg Printing and Publishing Co., 1895], p. 117). Dabney, apparently a son-in-law of J. H. D. Bowmar was "an engineer of much skill and experience" (Ibid, p. 30) and made the preliminary surveys for what was to later become the Yazoo Canal. Of great importance to Vicksburg commerce, the canal returned Vicksburg to a harbor city after a change in the course of the Mississippi River resulted in the isolation of Vicksburg from the water. Bowman Dabney, named for his grandfather was born in the house in 1872 and later became a prominent Vicksburg attorney.

Probably one of the first houses to be built in this area of town which was outside of the original city limits of Vicksburg, the Galleries maintains the traditional Georgian plan and Greek Revival interior details of houses constructed before the Civil War. Only its Italianate style paired brackets and arched windows give indication of a slightly later date. Also significant are the cut-out balusters and tin roof in imitation of shingles which have been retained from the 1880s period.
