Narrative Description

Anshe Chesed Cemetery is located on a hilly ten and a half acre site within the Vicksburg National Military Park, bounded on the south by Clay Street and on the north and east by Confederate Avenue. The cemetery is set apart from the National Park by large trees, a number of cedars, and shrubs. There are no other significant plantings or trees. Access to the cemetery is from the end of Grove Street on the west side. The Anshe Chesed Temple, built in the 1960s, is on Grove Street near the cemetery. The entrance is enhanced with paired rusticated stone piers with concrete caps. The piers are joined by a small section of ornamental wrought iron fence. The double ornamental wrought iron gates are attached to the taller of the piers. These piers are further enhanced with large concrete balls. There is a short stretch of wrought iron fence on either side of the piers. Incised in a smooth panel in the left center pier is "ANSHE CHESED/CEMETERY" and on the right center pier is incised "1910." Once inside the gate, the drive, which is made of concrete wheel tracks, splits into two directions with the left drive essentially heading due east, dividing the north side of the cemetery in half. The right drive takes a right turn and then back east, dividing the south side in half. The roads converge at the east end, but a short spur continues to the north to a summer house. The summer house is a square pavilion with a slate shingle hip roof supported with stuccoed brick columns. The right half is enclosed with plywood for storage.

There are over 1,100 marked graves and at least forty-six unmarked graves which were "removed from the old Jewish Cemetery to the present one."<sup>1</sup> Early Jewish settlers arrived in Vicksburg in the early 1820s, but it is not known where they buried their dead prior to the establishment of this cemetery in 1864. A volume in the documents of Temple Anshe Chesed lists the names of the deceased and notes the forty-six who were reinterred in what is referred to as "The Old Section."<sup>2</sup>

Graves in the Anshe Chesed Cemetery are identified with a variety of markers. The majority of the markers are headstones with flat or rounded tops or scrolls, but there are also a good number of footstones and ground tablets, and a significant number of pedestal obelisks, columns and bedsteads. There are a couple of plain stones which mark the graves of Confederate soldiers who died during the Civil War. Most markers are enhanced with sculpture, relief decoration, incised decorations and plaques. These adornments are generally traditional designs such as roses, oak leaves, garland, lilies, small angels, hands, a wheel, Woodmen of the World and Masonic symbols, etc. The majority of the markers include an inscription in Hebrew. There are also a few statues of angels, women, children, and a lamb; a large tree trunk; and a large number of urns, with and without drapes. There are at least four examples of the "Cohanim (Kohanim)" hands. These hands with thumbs and forefingers joined are a symbol of the members of the ancient priestly tribe of Aaron. The hands are arranged in order to form an opening, which directs the radiance of God to stream down on the person. The Cohanim hands usually mark the graves of fallen Cohns, Cohens, Cahns, and Cowens.<sup>3</sup> Examples at Anshe Chesed are markers for Samuel Kahn, Samuel Cahn, Solomon Cohen, and Alexander Kuhn.

The stones are in rows from east to west and face north. However, there are a number of stones with the family name on the south side of the marker, as well. Family plots are not delineated by fences, curbing, or walls as are often found in historic cemeteries. A family section is sometimes distinguished by a larger stone incised with the family name or a pair of smaller stones with the initial of the last name. There are quite a few foot stones, some of which are simple rectangular stones with "Momma," "Papa," or "Daughter," but many more are large bolsters with names incised. Incised in Hebrew on most of the tombstones are the words "here lies."

While the majority of the grave markers in this cemetery are simple, there are a few that are monumental in size and design. These are generally based on classical designs with a heavy pier, with or without columns on the corners, supporting a decorative entablature, some topped with urns. The Ruhman marker has a large stone box topped with two squatty columns, from which springs a tall arch capped with a draped urn.

The cemetery was enhanced in 1924 when Fannie Adler made a generous financial contribution in memory of her son A. A. "Bud" Adler. With her donation, fifty-three new lots were located on the southeast of the main entrance of the Vicksburg National Military Park, new concrete roadways and concrete wheel tracts were placed, and water lines were run throughout.<sup>4</sup>

The majority of markers and other adornments are in good condition. However, there are some urns which have fallen from their positions, markers covered in mold, or markers where the inscription is worn and difficult to read. This is an active cemetery, however very few new burials occur given the small Jewish population remaining in Vicksburg.

Statement of Significance Summary Paragraph (Provide a summary paragraph that includes level of significance, applicable criteria, justification for the period of significance, and any applicable criteria considerations.)

Anshe Chesed Cemetery in Vicksburg, Mississippi is eligible for National Register listing under Criteria A, within the themes of Ethnic Heritage and Exploration/Settlement. Jews were among the first settlers in Vicksburg and, through their participation in the commercial, political, and social activities, were active in the development of Vicksburg. Anshe Chesed Cemetery is the most significant remaining resource that is associated with the Jewish heritage of Vicksburg. There are only a few historic resources, residences and commercial buildings, affiliated with Jews in Vicksburg, and none of these can be used to interpret the vast influence that this population had on the development of Vicksburg.

Anshe Chesed Cemetery in Vicksburg, Mississippi is eligible for National Register listing under Criteria A, within the themes of Ethnic Heritage and Exploration/Settlement. Jews were among the first settlers in Vicksburg and, through their participation in commercial, political, and social activities, were active in the development of Vicksburg. Anshe Chesed Cemetery is the most significant remaining resource that is associated with the Jewish heritage of Vicksburg. There are only a few historic resources, residences and commercial buildings, affiliated with Jews in Vicksburg, and none of these can be used to interpret the vast influence that this population had on the development of Vicksburg.

The story of the Jews in Vicksburg is an integral part of the story of the city itself. Jewish men and women were business owners, physicians, lawyers, and teachers. They served in the administrations and public institutions of Warren County and the City of Vicksburg and worked to promote the progress of their city. Evidence of their early commitment to public service was the election of M. A. Levy as a selectman of the City of Vicksburg in 1832.<sup>5</sup> Levi Lowenberg was elected Justice of the Peace in 1863 and served until 1900. Abe Kiersky was the city's tax assessor from 1889 to 1937. Vicksburg Jews also served during the Civil War and in both world wars. A marker for Charles Beer Hirsch provides a reminder of the ultimate sacrifice during wartime, as it reads "Reportedly lost over Belle Isle, France 1943."

The majority of Jews in Vicksburg were engaged in retail and wholesale businesses, and as cotton brokers or factors. In the 1866 city directory, ninety Jewish families owned thirty-five stores. Some of the largest commercial concerns were owned by Jews and the monumental nature of their grave markers reveals their financial success. These merchants include the Blum family, Schwartz family, Leyens family, the Ehrman family and the Rice family. Vicksburg was the largest city in the state until 1910 and this success was due in part to its location on the Mississippi River and railroad lines, but it can also be attributed to the diligence of these entrepreneurs. An 1895 advertisement designated the Ehrmans as the "Largest Meat Dealer in the South." Charles Ehrman and his children owned a chain of nine meat markets and Charles served in the Mississippi State Legislature.<sup>6</sup> Baer and Brothers Dry Goods Store was started in 1865 and by 1871 employed seventy clerks.<sup>7</sup> Louis Bloom was associated with Baer and Brothers and when he died in 1926 left $6,500 for a memorial fountain. This statue of Hebe (daughter of Zeus) stands today at the end of the memorial rose garden in downtown Vicksburg.<sup>8</sup> The Cotton Exchange was founded in 1874 and incorporated in 1886. In 1890, there were twenty-two active members, nine were of the Jewish faith.<sup>9</sup> Early in Vicksburg's history, Jews were also physicians, druggists, lawyers, members of the Board of Trade (later changed to Chamber of Commerce), bankers, and served as directors on bank boards.

They established benevolent organizations that provided support for all citizens, not just for Jews. In 1841, the Jewish people of Vicksburg established their first benevolent organization—the Men of Mercy, the beginnings of a congregation.<sup>10</sup> Their purpose was to help the needy, the sick, the newcomers, and the transient Jews. The oldest chartered ladies organization in Vicksburg is the Ladies Hebrew Benevolent Society founded on April 3, 1866.<sup>11</sup> Represented in this cemetery, as evidenced by inscriptions on grave markers are members of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Masons, and the B'nai B'rith Society. B. S. Dryfus's marker states "Past Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Ohio IOOF/ Erected by the Grand Lodge of Ohio IOOF." The gravestones of Abe Meyer and Abe Ruhman are incised with the Masonic symbol. Jews were also active in other benevolent organizations such as the Shriners and Woodmen of the World. Abe Love's grave marker includes the emblem of the Shriners, a scimitar from which hangs a crescent, while the Woodmen of the World emblem can be found on Bernhardt Ulleddorff's tombstone.

This cemetery is also the final resting place for four men who spent their lives in service to the congregation. Rabbis Bernard Gotthelf, Herman Bien, Solomon Kory, and Adolf Philippsborn are buried in Anshe Chesed Cemetery. Katherine Kory, the wife of Rabbi Kory, is also buried here. She helped to establish the Civic League. Rabbi Kory was a leader in the Knights of Pythias, the Masonic Order, the Chamber of Commerce, and was vice president of the Rotary Club.<sup>12</sup>

When Vicksburg was incorporated in 1825, with a population of 3,000, there were approximately twenty Jewish settlers. They had immigrated from Bavaria, Prussia and Alsace Lorraine. These families worshipped in private homes with various lay leaders conducting services. More Jews arrived in the next twenty years, including three Sartorius brothers who brought with them two Torahs.<sup>13</sup> It is not recorded where Jews were buried in these early years.

In 1862, fifty Jewish families formed the Hebrew Benevolent Congregation Anshe Chesed and they received a charter from the state of Mississippi.<sup>14</sup> Tradition holds that the leader of the congregation at this time was Bernard Yoste, a native of Charlesville, France. He provided the first public site of worship by erecting a hall over his business on Levee Street (not extant).

On August 23, 1864, the Anshe Chesed Cemetery was established. It was not the first final resting place for the Jewish people, however. According to Julius Herscovici, a Jewish historian, it was "customary with Jews, when they settle at a place, they acquire immediately a burial ground, so that their dear ones may rest in eternal sleep."<sup>15</sup> The fact that there was a cemetery was mentioned in old newspaper articles, but the location was not. The Chevra Kadisha ledger records the names of bodies that were "removed from the Old Jewish Cemetery to the present one." According to Herscovici, the old cemetery may have been located on the corner of Zollinger's Hill and Jackson Road, on land owned by Bernard Yoste, the first president of Anshe Chesed Congregation.<sup>16</sup>

The property on which Anshe Chesed Cemetery was established was owned by Harris and Elias Kiersky, brothers who were listed among the founders of the Anshe Chesed congregation. In 1864, they sold the land to the congregation for $4,000, $1,000 less than they bought it for two years prior because the land was in the middle of the siege lines during the Civil War. When they purchased the 30 acres, there were tenant houses, grazing land, and woods. By Vicksburg's surrender in 1863, the tenant houses had been destroyed, the grazing land was mud, the "ground was overrun with vermin," and part of the beautiful woods had been timbered for use by soldiers.<sup>17</sup> The first burial in the new cemetery was that of Meyer Meyer on May 16, 1865.

On July 29, 1868, the congregation bought a lot on the east side of Cherry Street, near the corner of Clay Street, for $3,500. Here they erected the first synagogue to be constructed in the state.<sup>18</sup> The Gothic edifice was completed in 1870 and served the congregation until 1969 when a new temple was constructed near the cemetery. The historic temple was demolished in 1983 after numerous attempts to save it.

In 1900, the congregation sold nineteen and a half acres of the cemetery property to the federal government so that it could be included in the newly created Vicksburg National Military Park. In return, the government was to erect an iron fence with brick on the south side of the cemetery and bridge it with the existing fence in the front of the cemetery; this fence does not exist today. The cemetery was enhanced in 1924 when Fannie Adler made a generous financial contribution

The Jewish population grew quickly from fifty families in 1862 to 520 individuals in 1878. Tragically, Temple Anshe Chesed buried 46 members during the Yellow Fever epidemic of 1878, including their rabbi who had attended the faithful since 1866. Because the Yellow Fever epidemic killed so many so quickly in 1878, the congregation provided a section of land where they buried the dead in rows with no regard to families. These dead were buried four or five at a time, and this area is referred to as the "Graveline." By 1905, there were 659 Jews, the largest percentage, 4.44% of the population of Vicksburg, before or since.<sup>20</sup> The number fell every year after and today (2014) there are about twenty members. The reason for the loss of members is due in part to the large percentage of mixed marriages, resulting in the loss to Judaism of many of the descendants of the early settlers and of those who settled in the 19th century.

Jewish cemeteries in Mississippi that are listed in the National Register include Beth Israel Cemetery in Meridian, established in 1870 (2.9 acres) and listed on March 22, 1989, and the Gemiluth Chassed Cemetery in Port Gibson, established in 1870 (150 square feet) and listed on July 22, 1979. The Natchez City Cemetery was listed on October 24, 1980 and includes Jewish Hill, a section dedicated to Jewish burials. Other Jewish cemeteries in Mississippi are the Beth Israel Cemetery in Jackson and the Hebrew Union Cemetery in Greenville.
